

Leading Projects

Develop personal qualities as a project leader and learn to organise your work and responsibilities effectively and purposefully.

As a project leader, you have the responsibility to achieve results within the set conditions. Are you able to complete the project according to specifications, on time, and within the agreed budget? On the one hand, this depends on how well you prepare, structure, set up, and control the project. On the other hand, how you deal with the people on the project team, the line organisation and the client is a key factor. The core of this training is to develop your personal qualities as a project leader. This will be extremely valuable and crucial both in your current project and in future projects.

Study method

Intake

Prior to the training, you complete an intake form, answering a number of questions about your specific personal situation. These questions will help you clearly define your development goal.

Experienced trainer

An experienced trainer guides the classroom sessions focusing on your learning needs. Your trainer is an expert, but above all your personal coach.

Sessions

This personal training focuses on developing your qualities as a project leader. In role-plays and discussions, you will practise many situations that tie in with your daily work environment. There is room for reflection on project management practice and mutual exchange of experiences. Talking about your own project situations makes the training even more specific to your own practice.

Online learning environment

In addition to the interactive classroom days, you work in a rich online learning environment that supports you in the learning process and helps you prepare for the sessions effectively. After completing the training, you continue to have one year access to all online resources for further deepening and reference.

Personal Action Plan

Upon completion of the training, you create a personal action plan.

ICM certificate

If you have completed the entire training, you are awarded the ICM certificate.
